The YODOCK WALL COMPANY adds fashionable good looks to the long list of features and benefits

Bloomsburg, PA –YODOCK products were recently included in the June 2007 issue of GQ Magazine. The story discussed the planned opening of the New Museum of Contemporary Art in Manhattan.

Anyone who has visited New York City recently has seen the extensive amount of construction throughout the five boroughs. For this particular construction site, the Yodock Model 2001M was chosen as a Longitudinal Channelizing Barricade to delineate pedestrians and traffic around the job, since it provides the best protection.

The Yodock Model 2001M Barricade is a patented, lightweight, heavy duty, plastic safety device. When filled with water or sand this barricade may be utilized for any type of safety, traffic control or perimeter protection plan. This barricade measures 32" x 72" and includes an independent coupling device to provide a positive interlock between units. With the patented post boot stabilizer, each barricade can be easily accessorized with fencing, signs and type III kits for increased safety.

The Yodock Wall Company is an industry leader in the ballastable barrier wall and longitudinal channelizing industry. They continue to supply superior products for applications that require superior safety, protection and yes a good looking jobsite too!
